

Royal College of Physicians

Dr Ian Bullock's biography

Chief Executive Officer, Royal College of Physicians, London

Ian is an experienced clinician and leader, with expertise in quality improvement, evidence based healthcare, critical care clinical practice, clinical and higher education. He leads strategic and operational development at a national and international level with the Royal College of Physicians, with over 33,000 members and 440 staff. He is a Quality Improvement and Leadership Fellow of the Health Foundation, has academic fellowships at Warwick and Keele University, and was recently awarded a Fellowship by the European Resuscitation Council. Ian has enjoyed senior positions within the National Health Service, at a number of Academic Institutions and Professional Bodies and more latterly has played a leading role in delivering the Royal College of Physicians 'Future Hospital Programme' and in enabling the RCP to deliver its ambitious five year strategy. Ian remains research and educator active, having played a leading role in the development of clinical simulation in both the UK and Europe for 20 years. A key driver to all the work he is involved in is the desire 'make a difference' in improving patient outcome and their experience of care. Ian is experienced in delivering quality improvement, education and evidence translation programmes in the gulf region. Ian has held a number of advisory roles with national health ministries.
